Online and blended learning is significant.

The number of online programs and online students at colleges and universities continues to grow, as does faculty interest in supporting online faculty and students. Online faculty and students need support to feel more invested in their roles and the community.

Supporting Online Faculty Recruiting, Orienting, and creating more engaging, effective, and meaningful learning experiences. As one of our many service offerings to our partner institutions, Wiley Education Services provides support and online students. feel supported as they teach online, and help promote a high-quality, consistent learning experience for recommendations should be adapted as appropriate. Doing so can help all faculty.

Each institution has its own unique circumstances and challenges, so these institutions of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU) about their current practices.

Learning at Public Universities: Recruiting, Orienting, and Supporting Online Faculty,” which surveyed member institutions. has become a major challenge for higher education institutions. This infographic is based on the study “Online grew. As a result, finding, training, and supporting faculty members to effectively teach in the online environment.

The number of online programs and online students at colleges and universities across the country continues to.

Support services for instructional design vary widely, as does consistency in instructional design support,.

Adjunct faculty are often used for online courses.

Evaluation of faculty teaching online varies.

Reported benefits of having adjuncts to teach online courses include:

- Flexibility to address variations in term-to-term enrollments
- Filling temporary vacancies
- Cost-effectiveness
- Employing active practitioners
- Providing students with access to talented faculty
- Scheduling courses that are taught online.

To download the full report:

CLICK HERE